

Press Release: UArctic Student Ambassadors meet global leaders in Tromsø

January 19, 2015 [FOR IMMEDIATE DISTRIBUTION]

The first group of the University of the Arctic (UARctic) Student Ambassadors meet in a four-day training workshop at UiT — The Arctic University of Norway in Tromsø, in connection with the Arctic Frontiers conference, January 17-20, 2015. The workshop includes briefings on the UArctic network and its activities, and training sessions on communication and social media. In addition, the workshop has a strong educational component, during which the students participate in lectures on contemporary Arctic issues from leading experts from across the UArctic network under the theme “Sustainable solutions for the Arctic.” The Student Ambassadors have group discussions, sharing experiences of different areas of the North to examine common challenges and potential solutions.

The academic lead of the workshop, Kari Laine, Director of the Thule Institute (University of Oulu) and UArctic Vice-President Research notes: “The key to the success of the workshop is how people from all across the Circumpolar North can learn from each other and share creative energy and engage in collaborative efforts irrespective of national boundaries.”

UARctic Student Ambassador Caitlyn Baikie from Labrador, and a student of Memorial University of Newfoundland (Canada) highlights, “Being a part of the first group of student ambassadors for the University of the Arctic has been inspiring since day one. Tromsø is a beautiful host city for our diverse backgrounds, cultures, and educational interests. I look forward to continuing our work together and creating a positive future for our Arctic.” Alexander Terentjev from Syktyvkar State University in the Komi Republic (Russia) continues, “The knowledge I've gathered has helped me realize the amount of issues and problems of the Arctic and its people. They all need to be solved by us, the people living here, who understand these problems and care about our home.”

The presence of the Student Ambassadors in Tromsø is also an opportunity for these representatives of UArctic and its member institutions to meet with global leaders who are attending the Arctic Frontiers. A special seminar takes place on January 19 with Prince Albert II of Monaco. US Special Representative to the Arctic Admiral Robert J. Papp Jr. (ret) also meets with the Student ahead of the US taking on the chairmanship of the Arctic Council. Other political leaders having discussions with the Student Ambassadors and other UArctic representatives include the Prime Minister of Finland, Alexander Stubb, Norway's Minister Foreign Affairs Børge Brende, and Chair of the Standing Committee of Parliamentarians of the Arctic Region (MP, Parliament of Norway) Eirik Sivertsen, and US Special Advisor on Arctic Science and Policy Fran Ulmer. Other meetings will also take place with politicians from Sweden, the Kingdom of Denmark and Singapore.

“Indeed, with this list of dignitaries eager to meet with our Student Ambassadors, it is clear that the students are the real VIPs,” remarks UArctic Vice-President Organization Outi Snellman (UARctic International Secretariat, University of Lapland, Finland).

The UArctic Student Ambassador program was created in October 2014 by UArctic's Board of Governors, as a select group of students drawn from our network of member higher education institutions. They represent a cross-section of the student body of our membership, and are selected based on their academic backgrounds and suitability for work in international cooperation. The Student Ambassadors act both as a bridge between UArctic's leadership and programs, represent UArctic in different contexts, and work to promote UArctic activities and its member institutions to their peers.
